GROUP AGRICULTURE TRAINING

Here is a story of how this gift helps others

In Nigeria, many farmers grow their crops using traditional methods. These methods produce small yields and very little profit. This can make it challenging for some farmers to make enough money to provide for their family. With group agriculture training, farmers can learn new techniques that will help them expand their farms and produce enough crops to eat and make a living.

After seeing a community's struggles, World Renew and its local partner thought it was important to bring training to the farmers in the area. In a three month span, over 400 farmers received training to learn how to grow more vegetables. During the training the farmers learned about different varieties of vegetables and where to buy the seeds.

Soon after learning new techniques farmers began planting seeds. After a short 60 day crop cycle, the farmers harvested their vegetables. They were surprised to see that their crop yield not only increased, but many of them doubled!

One of the farmers shared his excitement. "We have extra income to pay for our children's education, we are eating better because we get nutritious vegetables regularly, we are healthier, and our families are happy," he said.

The gift of agriculture training to a farmer in Nigeria is life-changing for someone who has struggled to earn enough money to provide for their family.
