Thank you for giving the gift of the Whole Barnyard

Forty percent of the world's people survive on the food they can grow. When their crops fail or the climate doesn't cooperate, people go hungry. Even in the best circumstances, people often merely subsist, never finding the wholeness and wellness (such as good health, income stability, education, and more) that God so wants for them. World Renew invests in the success of farmers through animal-raising programs that offer powerful opportunities for transformation.

In Cambodia, Yun and Neum received two cows from a World Renew "cow bank" in their village. After paying the bank back with a calf and generating extra income from milk sales, the couple was able to improve their family's nutrition and afford school fees for their three children. Two cows equals better health, more income, education. Abundance.

In Kenya, Mrs. Wangui Kinna lost her cow in a drought, and she wasn't sure how she would support her family without it. She readily accepted a goat and training in its care from World Renew, and she has been delighted with how little water and active care it needs. She has been able to buy medicine with income from goat sales, and she has better health and some time for her family because of the reduced demands of caring for a smaller animal. One goat equals medicine, more time, better health. Abundance.

In Laos, the Tong's were among the poorest families in their village, and they were chosen to receive two pigs from World Renew. With training and support, Tong Lee, the father, has turned this small gift into a catalyst for change in his family's life. The family's income is stable and growing, and Tong Lee is an active volunteer in his village, serving as a veterinarian and a village health worker. Two pigs equals a stable income, success, service. Abundance.

Around the world, World Renew introduces animal-raising programs to help participants improve their health and earn a more stable livelihood while they work to move beyond subsistence and embrace lives of more abundance. World Renew and its local partners offer training and support that can aim at success among people whose lives depend on it.

With your gift of the Whole Barnyard from World Renew's gift catalog, you have given incredible opportunities for abundance.

THANK YOU
